I am a final-year PhD scholar in Economics at the University of Calcutta, where I am completing my doctoral thesis, Rethinking Domestic Labour: A Theoretical Inquiry, under the supervision of Prof. Anjan Chakrabarti.

I study domestic labour through a class-focused lens, examining how gender relations, power relations, processes of social reproduction, and the wider economy shape domestic labour. My aim is to conceptualise domestic labour in its own specificity, without reducing it to any aspect of relationality. Alongside this theoretical work, I have undertaken qualitative research, including primary surveys, on domestic labour and domestic production in Indian households.
